Charlene Delaney is happy with her move from Iowa to California. Although it is a big change from her usual small town way of life, she decides that this might be a good switch for her, and that maybe she will meet new friends and get to see another part of the country. When her boss, Joe, asks her one night to show his brother, Darren, around, who is visiting from New York, Charlene obliges.

After Charlene's yoga class, many of the students head to the beach for a bonfire. What happens next is sure to change Charlene's life forever. She meets Xavier, who recognizes her from the yoga class. He strikes up conversation, and the two hit it off. In the meantime, Charlene discovers that her friend Sarah is gone, and so is Darren. She begins a search down the beach, and is met by a mysterious man who never introduces himself.

Charlene is led to the House of Glass, which sits alone off behind the dunes. Inside, she sees Sarah and Darren, and realizes that they are safe, but that they cannot hear her from the outside. Xavier takes it upon himself to tell Charlene about the lore of the vampires in the area, and then later helps show her around the house, itself.

What Charlene doesn't realize is that Xavier is also a vampire, and that he wants nothing more than to bring Charlene into his world.
