21st Century Policing: Policy Shifts after the Deaths of Michael Brown and Eric Garner Davin Harris

The vast majority of the nation's law enforcement officers perform their very difficult jobs admirably with respect for their communities and in compliance with the law. Even so, there are incidents in which this is not the case and police must be held accountable to knowing and abiding by the rule of law.

The duty of the police officer is to protect community safety, not execute justice. Law enforcement officers must allow the courts to determine the final fate of an alleged criminal. The police officer is not a judge, jury or soldier. This book examines emerging dynamics between police and the local communities they protect.
